CBO Assessment Reports Deficit Reduction But Higher Uninsured Rate Under GOP Health Bill

March 13, 2017 - On Monday, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) released its assessment of the proposed repeal and replacement bill, called the American Health Care Act, announced by Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives last week. The proposed legislation is a two-part bill, one coming from the Ways and Means Committee, and the other from the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The CBO's assessment reports that based on their estimations the bill in its current form would reduce deficits by $337 billion over a 10-year period and increase the uninsured rate by 24 million over that same period. They estimate that the uninsured rate would increase 14 million in 2018 compared to the current law.

Most notable for employers, the proposed legislation repeals the employer mandate and there will be no cap on the employer tax exclusion. View the full summary of the major impacts of the bill.

The bill has made it through committee mark-up and is currently awaiting a full vote by the House of Representatives. "It is important to note that this bill still faces an uphill battle in the House. The bill must also make its way through the Senate and thread the needle required to meet the requirements of reconciliation. It is very probable that the proposed legislation we see today will not be the final form," explains Greg Stancil, Director of Healthcare Reform for Scott Benefit Services.

The GOP has outlined a three-step approach in repealing and ultimately replacing the Affordable Care Act (ACA). Step one is the current attempt that repeals and replaces parts of the ACA through budget reconciliation, which requires only a simple majority in the Senate. Step two is for the HHS to deregulate the marketplace through administrative action. Step three is to pass additional policies that would require bipartisan support.
